Submission – File 2025-64274-I - Supplementary Clarification: Cross-Platform Comment Suppression Evidence
December 14, 2025
Registrar and parties,
The applicant submits the following clarification regarding the supplementary evidence of cross-platform comment suppression filed December 14, 2025.
The screenshots of shadow-deleted comments were recovered from archived sources dating to December 2022, during a period of hospitalization following the Kingston Road incident (detailed in prior filings).
This evidence predates the current Application and demonstrates that suppression of the applicant's expression has occurred across multiple platforms for several years, not solely in response to this proceeding.
The pattern of comment hiding (visible in archives but not on live profiles) supports the claim of coordinated interference with the applicant's ability to engage with audience feedback.
This long-standing suppression strengthens the reprisal claim under s.8 of the Code by illustrating a consistent effort to isolate the applicant and diminish the reach of creed-related expression.
Specifically, the argument that the comments were removed for being hateful, is disproven by this filing, the comments were fully visible in the archive, but hidden from me on my own account, they were not removed at all, they were hidden from me, the exact same pattern we saw demonstrated on Youtube just a few weeks ago:
https://archive.org/details/proof-of-reprisal-google/CROSS%20PLATFORM%20SUPPRESSION%20RE%20BITCHUTE/
My argument is that if suppression of my materials, and the hiding of comments and other measures, are so prevalent, almost everywhere I go online, first, it implies coordination of some kind. Second, it becomes less of a stretch to then argue that the same thing that's been happening everywhere I go, is also happening on Barnes and Noble's website, and Amazon's website. As this would explain why 55 books were earning next to nothing after being up for years. We could get the exact number of books from Amazon, in their sworn statement, regarding whether or not shadowbanning has occurred and what measures were applied to my books and my account, however the deadline for that statement is tomorrow. And I note that Amazon has not answered the question yet.
I will file for a finding of adverse inference tomorrow if they do not answer.
